Access, Adapt, Achieve: Contemporary Resources for Student Veterans | Wendy Lang

This session will discuss recent, current, and future work by the Institute to assist veterans throughout the postsecondary lifecycle and beyond to employment and economic opportunity. The conversation will highlight the resources available through the Institute while exploring emerging efforts that will study contemporary themes, cooperative efforts, and innovative solutions that adapt to the emerging needs of veterans post-COVID.

Veterans, Firearms, and Suicide: What You Need to Know | Dr. Ted Bonar

Firearms account for more than half of all deaths by suicide. While Veterans have a unique relationships with firearms, firearms account for about 70% of Veteran deaths by suicide. This presentation addresses the acute problem of suicide, Veteran-informed lethal means safety strategies, and the cultural challenges of conversations about firearms for those at risk of suicide. This presentation takes no stance on policy, advocacy, limitations, or rights regarding firearms. This presentation is focused on the challenges inherent in discussing firearms before or during suicidal crisis, and approaches the conversation through the intersection of safety, cultural language, and values of those who are at risk of suicide and who have access to a weapon.
Advancing the Future of Veteran and Military Services: Fostering Dialogue, Best Practices, and Post-Graduation Success | Dr. Linda Euto and Dr. Corri Zoli | Virtual/Hybrid Session
Research plays a crucial role in shaping the future of veteran and military services, particularly in areas such as recruitment, admission, and enrollment, as well as career readiness and post-graduation success. Our research efforts are driven by the goal of creating a lasting public good through conversations. By fostering dialogue among veterans about their stories and experiences, we can promote a more nuanced understanding of the challenges they have encountered. This dialogue serves as a platform to dispel misconceptions and promote greater equity within military and veteran communities. Through our research and our work on dialogues, this session will aim to identify effective strategies and innovative approaches that can guide the future of veteran and military services. Through evidence-based recommendations, we will offer ways our work contributes to the development of inclusive policies, programs, and practices that meet the unique needs of military-affiliated students and promote their long-term success in collegiate study and post-graduation success.

Breaking Down Barriers: How Our Education Partners Can Help Veterans Succeed | Jason Wise
The Texas Veterans Network Powered by Combined Arms is there for our education partners to help the military community through the transition process. This session will show how our system can be used to refer veterans to any resource available in the Combined Arms platform and make sure they get the support needed to succeed after their military service.

Multiple Pathways to Success: How John Deere Leverages Their Dealership Network to Acquire Talent from 2- and 4-Year Colleges | David Bostic
John Deere is a company that operates on a large scale with extensive needs for talented individuals at production facilities, design centers, headquarters, and thousands of independently owned and operated dealership locations throughout the country. Fortunately, student veterans present a highly skilled and motivated talent pool that has proven to be up to the task. Delve into how John Deere’s Military Hiring Program serves to connect student veterans from both universities and community colleges with career roles across the nation.

Benefit Processing and Certification Best Practices | Jeremy Tanner
This session will explore best practices implemented by the military education benefits team within the Scholarships & Financial Aid office at Texas A&M University. We will present and discuss our responsibilities, our specific team organizational structure and responsibilities, the importance of planning frequent reporting, and how we work with the many counterparts we have on our campus who assist us with the successful processing of benefits for nearly 5,000 students each semester.
CARES: A Student Success Framework for Military-Connected Students | Dr. Wayne Taylor
This presentation sheds light on the challenges and experiences faced by student veterans and military-connected students in their journey through higher education. While student success remains a top priority for institutions, a one-size-fits-all approach may not adequately address the unique needs of this population. By examining existing student success models and exploring their relevance to military-connected students, the presentation emphasizes the necessity of developing a separate student success framework explicitly tailored to address the unique circumstances faced by student veterans. The session delves into the CARES framework and its implementation at the southeastern Research One University. CARES encompasses critical factors such as integration, engagement, involvement, and support, which are crucial in fostering military-connected students’ academic and personal well-being.

Recruiting Staff and Faculty for the Future of Veteran and Military Services | Dr. Monika Sziron
Are you effectively recruiting staff and faculty for the future of veteran and military services on your campus? In this session we will discuss how to write an attractive job posting, issues and potential solutions with high turnover in higher ed, where to find your next employee, and other important topics relating to onboarding new military-affiliated and civilian employees.

The Lights are Blinking Red: Moral Injury and Well Being of Student Veterans | Dr. Katherine Selber
The session covers the importance of educating higher education institutions and veteran service organizations about moral injury and the need for healing of our Iraq and Afghanistan veterans.

Operation EQ: Building Social-Emotional Intelligence to Supercharge Your Game | R.J. Jenkins
Research shows that 80% - 90% of the competencies that differentiate top performers in professional settings are in the domain of social-emotional intelligence. Research also shows that employers and managers often typecast veterans as unfeeling, transactional, and less suited for roles that require high EQ. This session will challenge that typecasting while also exploring why it is so prominent. Participants will learn what social-emotional intelligence is, why it is so vitally important, and how to build capacity across several EQ competencies not only for themselves, but for their teams.

Return to (Civil) Service | Thomas Braden | Virtual/Hybrid Session
Mr. Braden has written a book describing the path for active duty to return to the federal civil service - he’d like to share what he knows especially if anyone is interested in pursuing job opportunities on USAJOBS.com
Impostor Leadership: Reframing a Dangerous Concept | R.J. Jenkins
Veterans sometimes struggle to recognize their full potential, and they do not always feel completely worthy of being where they are, especially in higher education and workforce settings. That feeling – feeling like you don’t deserve the good things that are happening to you, or feeling like you don’t truly belong in your environment – is a hallmark of something called impostor phenomenon. In this session, you will learn that, despite what you have likely heard, impostor feelings are not necessarily a personal and/or professional liability, and that they can be understood instead as both a character strength and a core quality of effective leadership. Participants will walk away from this engagement with strategies that will help them reframe and leverage impostor feelings as a powerful tool for success in school, at work, and in life.

Putting Theory to Work: How to Make Veteran Critical Theory (VCT) Come Alive on Your Campus | R.J. Jenkins
In 2017, Drs. Glenn Phillips and Yvonne Lincoln introduced the world to what they called an "emancipatory paradigm" – Veteran Critical Theory (VCT) – a critical framework that challenges us as individuals and institutions not simply to serve student veterans, but to explore new ways of knowing them. In this session, we will talk about what VCT is, and we will discuss the 11 tenets of VCT as articulated by Phillips and Lincoln, but mostly, we will workshop practical and concrete approaches for bringing VCT to life on our campuses. This session is appropriate for student veterans and veteran-serving higher education professional with an interest in how VCT can empower them to make an immediate impact on the experience of student veterans at their schools.

Build a Better World: Veterans in the TAMU School of Architecture | Dr. Patrick Suermann
In the recent post–GLOBAL WAR ON TERRORISM (GWOT) era, the largest number of veterans in the largest higher education institution in the country was in the Department of Construction Science in the School of Architecture. More so than any other academic program, the School of Architecture can build on the creativity, leadership, and technical acumen that veterans exhibit. Listen to this session for ideas of channeling motivated veterans to programs by capitalizing on their proven skillsets.

Mental Health and Engagement: A Holistic Collaborative Approach | Dr. Sarah Skelton
Mental health support on college campus' for military affiliated students is still in infancy stages. It often relies on external resources that are siloed and disconnected from the university. Many of our military affiliated students are nontraditional and may benefit from a more inclusive model of utilization of mental health on campus that destigmatizes and combats the myth that student veterans do not engage on campus. This presentation focuses on the modification of combat operational stress and embedded models that are highly utilized and effective while in service to an embedded model on campuses and specifically the use of college counseling centers and veterans’ spaces/offices. This presentation will provide universities with specific strategies and examples of strength based, inclusive, innovative and evidence-based practices. Examples of topics include clinical therapeutic interventions, support groups, peer to peer intervention outreach and engagement, and suicide prevention, intervention and postvention, education and training.

Combating Mental Health Challenges in Military–Affiliated Students & College Communities | Rachel Brauner and Dr. Lakshmi Mahadeven
Receive an overview of the MHFA_RTX methodology, outcomes and testimonials from currently trained Mental Health First Aiders. Peer Mentor Programs for Military–Connected Students | Dr. James Kumm
Peer mentor programs have emerged as a valuable resource to support these students in their academic, social, and emotional integration into campus life. This presentation provides a comprehensive overview of peer mentor programs for military-connected students, highlighting their key features, benefits, and potential areas for improvement.

Leveraging Corporate Relationships | Richard Delgado, Jr.
Leveraging corporate partnerships to utilizing the resources, networks, and expertise of companies to achieve mutual benefits and accomplish shared goals. It involves creating strategic alliances and collaborations with business to enhance the student experience.
The #1 thing we hear veterans tell us they experience when they leave the service is a "lost sense of purpose." Many pursue a degree, whether it be a undergraduate or graduate level. They apply to institutions not fully knowing what they will do with that degree or even what major is right for them, but pursue it because it is seen as their "next step." The VET+MAP process helps veterans remove those doubts and ensures they set themselves on the right path to lifelong fulfillment by:

- identifying and understanding one’s strengths and values
- discovering their purpose
- aligning their strengths and values with their purpose
- developing a roadmap to fulfilling that purpose

Veterans Integration to Academic Leadership (ViTAL), provides veterans with services that will assist them in their transition from military life to the college community. These services include; assistance with enrollment in the VA healthcare system, relationship counseling, crisis intervention counseling, stress management, grief management, and individual or family counseling.

Forging Connections: How to Expand and Leverage Your Professional Network for Success in Supporting Military-Affiliated Students | Monteigne Long

In this session, participants will explore the dynamic landscape of military-connected student support, and discover innovative approaches to broaden and harness their professional network, elevating their role in higher education. Leverage connections and enhance your ability to guide and empower military-connected students toward success.

The Veteran Aggie Leaders for Outreach, Research, and Resources (VALOR²) is a peer-led program that engages student veterans to assess and align critical resource needs to facilitate academic, financial, personal, and career success during the transitions to and through campus. Explore new ways to provide decision makers with timely, reliable information to best allocate scarce resources. Discuss how to train student veteran leaders to identify and report peer needs, increase engagement, and facilitate discussions to amplify program impact.
